There were a lot of cooks concerned in supplying the froth at the Shubert ter, who was opposed to marrying the man she did not love: "When I married your father several of my relatives offered to bet me that I could never learn to love him. But I did, Frans Lehar, who composed the score of desperately."

Has anybody ever bet—say in the Lambs—George Nash that he would never be a star? He was at the effort again last night. He acted in "The Mark of the Beast," which was written by George Earle and Fanny Cannon. Mr. Nash last appeared at the Princess Theatre and acted in "The Three of Hearts." Then he had a somewhat larger theatre, the Thirty-ninth. If the aresent venture does not succeed will present venture does not succeed will polations by Gaetano Merola, who content the Bandbox or even the little theatre down in East Twenty-seventh street which Mr. Davenport called the English text by Edgar Smith and Joseph Herbert, with additional lyrics by even the Thimble Theatre. There is, of even the Thimble Theatre. There is, of course, more than one way of being a gar if one is determined to be.

Last night Mr. Nash acted the role of a Judge who was called in to defend a young wife when her husband tried to divorce her. She talked to him frankly and confessed her guilt. He would not act for her in court, as she was guilty, but he offered to do what he could to reconcile her husband. He does convince the young husband that his happiness and his wife's future are to be beet preserved by foregiveness.

Same Problem for Judge.

Matthew Woodward. Certainly Roy Atwell of the model of his songs, and there was music by Silvio Hein to accompany its odd lines. Thus the mountains labored. Why is the operetta text usually so inferior to the msic? Or is it in reality so much less praiseworthy? It is not necessary to possess the least technical knowledge to be convinced that one is bored. On the other hand, music may be soothing, even if it is therefore the misfortune of the librettist that his shortcomings are perceptible to the untrained specare perceptible to the untrained spec

It is then that he learns of his own wife's infidelity. She has been gui'ty of just the same step from the path. Shall he forgive her as he has already advised the young man to do, or will the more material side of his nature; gain the mastery and compel him to awid just the course he has advised for the younger man? He wavers, but in the end it is the man and not the beast in his nature which conquers.

The Mark of the Beast," though it is older than the theatre itself, aims at some degree of originality in treatment. There are not always two of the "human triangles." Playwrights are usually content with picturing one husband and one wife and the inevitable lover. But in this case there were two husbands and two wives, all central characters of the play.

Play Cordially Received. Play Cordially Received.

Perhaps it was this circumstance to so cordially receive it. The play, at any rate, kept the interest to the end witner at flagging, and there were one or two so-called "big scenes" which were creatiably handled. Then, too, there are many admirers of George Nash and his acting.

In "The Mark of the Beast" he has a role somewhat similar to that of John Mason in "Common Clay," now being acted at another theatre. It is a character that seems to fit him well and he carries it off to general satisfaction. At the end of the second act, after Mr. Nash Robert Ormsby discovers the weakness of his wife—a scene which was one of the strongest in the play—he was ealled before the curtain time and time again.

Alma Belwin, who divided the honors of leading lady with Lenore Ulrich, gave a good portrayal of one of the wives led

Mr. Nash's third effort to become a about the relentless microbe that caught you whatever you eat added some gayety you whatever you eat added some gayety to the scene. It might be said, however, which it opened and closed. In the sec-ond act Mr. Atwell's amusing couplets that the supply of verses to this ditty was ample. Mr. Atwell had not been taken unawares. He was throughout BILLIE BURKE IN NEW ROLE, the evening quite as comic as his opportunities allowed. The same is true of Harry Conor, who contrived to be funny on many occasions as a valetudinarian

Thou Gavest Me."

Billie Burke's new play, in which she will appear under the management of her husband, Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., is which the Shuberts had produced "Alone at Last" there might have been less than the control of the undertaking the control of the contro of her husband, Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., is of her husband. Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., is of her husband. Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., is of her husband. Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., is at Last" there might have been less thance of success for the work. To them must go all the credit of the undertaking. John Charles Thomas's agreeable barytone, the vivacious acting of Jose Collins, the singing of Mme. Namara, which is above the average of operetta, and the excellent orchestra imparted to the work what interest it possessed for of the play in New York.

Miss Burke has expressed a great desire to act in this play. It will give her a much different kind of role than theatregoers have seen her in. "The Woman Thou Gevest Me" is a dramatization of the novel of the same name poser can offer to-day to his admirers.

Mr. Lyon's song is remarkable for the brevity of its lines, the majority of which are only a few syllables long. It is in blank verse and these two qualifications, Mr. Lyon believes, will make it peculiarly adaptable for stirring, martial music. There are ninety-seven lines, taking the form of an allegorical narrative which the writer has entitled "Victory." Warren Heddon is composing an air for the song.

Mr. Lyon began his career in this city as a real estate dealer, with John Jacob Astor, A. T. Stewart and Henry Clay Carrel.
